You can learn to make your own tabletop games at Design Week Philippines 2019

Plus other week-long gatherings and activities creatives won't want to miss

Design Week Philippines is back and it will give us a peak into the world of game-making.

When you were a child, have you ever tried to make your own Rock, Paper, Scissors weapon (yes, we're looking at your fire, squid, and nail hand movements) or have you decided to change the rules during an UNO card match? If you do, then you should also realize how strong games were able to improve our creativity.

Games—may it be board or card—challenges us to think outside the box and rules. It's highly possible that you owe your great marketing strategies today due to your Monopoly wins or your steady hands to your impressive Jenga skillset or your extensive vocabulary to Scrabble's dictionary.

Aside from the challenges, the rules of games also pushes our creativity forward. And sometimes, the push becomes too much that we want to create our own rules and, later on, own games.

If you felt that way at some point, you're not alone. Even my eight-year-old self couldn't help but feel the urge to change the rules of Chess. And there are a lot of other local board and card game enthusiasts who feel the same way; some even made their own games happen.

One designer who was well-aware of the crisis our sea turtles are facing created "Pawikan Patrol," a card game about saving some pawikan and their nests from a poacher. Another made a card game based on writer Mars Ravelo and illustrator Nestor Redondo's Darna comic book.
